Combating Racism in Public Health

Dr. Jason Emory, Lecturer at UC Merced
 The Role of Implicit Cognition and Stress in Health Disparities

Event Details

Dr. Jason Emory is a full-time lecturer in Psychological Sciences at University of California, Merced. His research and teaching interests focus upon the impact of implicit, unconscious cognition upon social perception and health-related issues. His talk will focus upon implicit, automatic brain/nervous-system processes and their role in social biases such as ingroup preference and outgroup prejudice. By understanding the basic process of how stereotypes are represented in the brain, we can better understand how these stereotypes are developed in the first place. These biases can lead not only to obviously prejudiced ideas, but also to subtle, unconscious biases of which an individual might not be aware. The talk will conclude with discussion of how these unconscious biases (i.e. stereotypes) can help to explain racial health disparities in the United States.

Combating Racism in Public Health

Guest Speaker: Felicia Jones, Executive Director of Healthy African American Families

Event Details

Felicia Jones is the Executive Director of Healthy African American Families. She is committed to decreasing health disparities in Los Angeles County by addressing the Social Determinants of Health in South Los Angeles and surrounding communities. Over the past 20 years, Ms. Jones has worked on numerous research projects in various roles from Community Researcher to Co-Investigator, including projects funded by the NIH and PCORI. These projects have addressed such diverse topics as autism, depression, preterm pregnancy, diabetes, and asthma, just to name a few. Also, she is a co-author on more than 40 peer-reviewed publications and has provided mentorship and training to junior researchers and community members. She views Community Partnered Participatory Research (CPPR) as a key method for improving community participation in research.
